Joshua K. Goldman

Joshua K. Goldman is a senior vice president at Blackstone where he advises on a range of regulatory issues covering sustainable investing. He was previously director of strategy at Via, an urban planning and public transit technology company, where he led global public-private partnerships and sustainability. Goldman began his legal career at Skadden, where he advised on the financing of renewable energy and transportation infrastructure projects. He has advised public and private sector organizations on energy transition and other strategy priorities as a consultant at BCG. Earlier in his career Goldman served on the staff of the White House Council of Advisers where he worked on a range of economic recovery policies emerging from the global financial crisis, along with domestic and international climate policy. He graduated from Cornell University and NYU School of Law and serves on the Board of the HOPE Program, an organization expanding access to careers for New Yorkers facing barriers to employment.
