Rudina Hajdari

Rudina Hajdari is a former Member of Parliament of Albania and the Program Director of the International Democracy Fellowship at the Institute for Global Affairs at Eurasia Group. The fellowship brings together a cohort of elected leaders from around the world to strengthen democratic practice, with the premise that democracy, while grounded in universal principles, is ultimately rooted in local political realities and values. She writes and speaks on democratic fragility, European politics, and Balkan affairs, and has been published in The Hill, among other outlets. She has been a Term Member of the Council on Foreign Relations since 2024 and a 2022 Millennium Fellow at the Atlantic Council. She has over a decade of experience in international affairs, public policy, and human rights advocacy. While serving as an MP, she led the European Integration Committee and played a key role in advancing Albania's EU accession. She worked on Capitol Hill for Congressman Eliot Engel, covering Balkan affairs, and at Albania's Permanent Mission to NATO. She holds an MA in Geopolitics from King's College London, an MA in Human Rights Studies from Columbia University, and a BA in Political Science from Fordham University.
